BBC MA in South Sudan is looking for a consultant trainer experienced in working with scriptwriters and actors on the development of a story arc for an episodic radio drama programme. The consultant will spend up to seven days working with a team of three scriptwriters and a director with the objective of articulating the overarching story, and then break it down into steps that enable the mapping out of sub-story plots, the identification and continuity of characters, and the production of coherent episodes. The theme of the story is peacebuilding and conflict resolution in communities.

The successful applicant will have worked in radio drama, have demonstrable experience of fostering creative writing and training others.

This workshop will take place in either Juba, South Sudan, or Nairobi, Kenya. The applicant must be able to secure a working visa to the country where the workshop is held. Applicants travelling to South Sudan must have completed the BBC's compulsory High Risk Emergency First Aid Training course. Applicants are asked to submit their CV, along with their preferred location for course delivery, and their costs per day for workshop days, plus travel or weekend days for preparing and facilitating the workshop.

Dateline for submission of application is 19th September 2017
